

Poll shows voters feel overlooked and are concerned about California policies*

While the commitment to fighting climate change remains strong, a recent poll shows Californians share serious concerns about how state policies are affecting their daily lives and the economy.

84%

say politicians have overlooked people like them.

This sentiment is shared by strong majorities across party lines, age groups, genders, ethnicities, and education levels.

7 in 10

Californians are worried about how California's climate goals will affect their daily lives.

Most Californians are NOT willing to take action

- Will not pay higher utility bills
- Will not drive less
- Will not change home from gas to electric
- Will not shop online less
- Will not take public transportation more
- Will not turn down heating/cooling system

71%

were also worried about the effect of California's climate goals on the economy.

75%

agree that we can NOT put the environment over the basic needs of American families.

